London, August 20.

THE following Piece was printed at the Hague by P. Scheltus Printer to the States General. Tho' it came to our Hands but late, yet finding it more particular than any other Account hitherto given of the Revolution of Naples, we judg'd it might not be unacceptable to the Publick.

A Journal of what pass'd in and about Naples, upon the Arrival of the Imperial Troops there.

AT length by the Blessing of God, the long wish'd for Day is come that the City of Naples has yielded it self to the Government of the most Illustrious House of Austria; for which they had always offer'd up their most hearty Prayers: No sooner were the German Troops, by the Care of his Imperial Majesty, and under the Command of General Taun, arriv'd in this Kingdom, in Behalf of our lawful Sovereign Charles III, than the Peasants forsok their Labour in the Fields, and with Cries of Joy ran in great Numbers to the high Roads, to be Spectators of their unmolested March quite to this City: The 3d of June 600 Germans came into the City of Capua, and the Night following a greater number of their Troops, with his Excellency Count Adam of Martinitz, his Imperial Majesty's Plenipotentiary in Italy, and Viceroy of this Kingdom: The Castle of Capua being attack'd, surrender'd the 4th to the Imperialists, and the Garrison march'd out the 5th with one Cannon. Here Te Deum was solemnly sung, while the Blessed Sacrament was expos'd; and the Inhabitants swore Allegiance to the King in the Hands of the Viceroy. The 6th the Army march'd, and came before Noon to Aversa; where they were met by Deputies of this City, who were attended by the most Loyal of the Populace, with the greatest Impatience to give Testimony of their Obedience and Devotion to His Majesty: They had green Branches of Olive in their Hands, and in their Hats, and conducted the Imperialists into Aversa, with the greatest Demonstrations of Joy: The Keys of the City were presented to the Viceroy by the Prince of Montefarchio for the Head of the other Deputies: [That Prince is of the House of Davalos, is a near Relation of the Marquis del Vasto Ambassador from King Charles to the Court of Vienna, has serv'd the House of Austria 70 Years, and is now in the hundredth Year of his Age.] The Viceroy receiv'd them very graciously, granting the Privileges demanded by the City, and promising to get them confirm'd to them by the King. Te Deum was sung there in the Cathedral, with the other Ceremonies that were observ'd in Capua; and in the Evening the Deputies return'd to Naples; from whence the Marquis of Villena, with two Gallies of the Duke of Turfus, and two of Naples, retir'd to Gaeta; yet not so soon, but that he saw the Colours of the House of Austria first set up, and also Pictures of our desir'd King Charles III carried by Crowds about the Streets, with Demonstrations of unspeakable Joy and Satisfaction from the whole City. The Illuminations, Fireworks, and Acclamations of Long live the King were so general and great, that the Name of Charles re-sounded in all Places, and deained the very Heavens. Signior Muscietola, Archbishop of Manfredonia, to give Testimony of his dutiful Respect to the Illustrious House of Austria, was the first who went to Aversa to compliment the Viceroy. The Imperial Army march'd from thence the Night of the 6th, and on Thursday, being the 7th in the Morning, arriv'd here before the Gate of Capua, and about the twelfth Italian Hour took Possession of this City. Three Regiments of Dragoons, two of Cuirassiers, five of Infantry, and one of Hussars, led by their Collonels and other Officers, march'd through the chief Streets of the City, follow'd by their General Count Taun, by the General of the Horse Vaubonne, and the Major-Generals Wetzell, Pate, and Caraffa, in the midst of whom was the Viceroy, attended by the chief Magistrates of the City, together with an incredible Throng of Gentlemen and Burghers, amidst a never ceasing Cry of Long live Charles the Third. The Viceroy and Generals alighted at the Cathedral, to pay their Devotions to our glorious Deliverer and Protector St. Januarius: Here they heard Mass, being attended by the foremention'd Deputies, and a great Number of Noblemen; who when the Service was over conducted the Viceroy and the Generals to the Palace of the Prince of San Severo, of the Family of Sangro, where they were lodg'd and splendidly entertain'd at the publick Expence. Four of our most Loyal Patricians, the Duke of Telesca, the Marquis Losfrano, Major General Don Tomaso Caraffa di Policastra, and Don Tiberio Caraffa d' Ebisano, who were return'd from Vienna, came into the City with the Generals, and an universal Applause was given them for their unshaken Loyalty. 'Tis impossible to express the Civilities and Friendliness with which the Viceroy receiv'd not only the Nobility who flock'd in great Numbers to bid him welcome, but likewise the Commonalty who came to pay him their dutiful Obedience; and the Affability and courteous Behaviour of General Taun, and of all the other Generals was universally admir'd. Visits were given and return'd between them and our Archbishop Cardinal Pignatelli; and the Viceroy was also visited by Signior Patazy the Pope's Nuncio: All the Ministers of the Collateral Council, and of the other Tribunals went likewise to pay their Duty to him. Mean while the Troops being posted by their Officers in the most convenient Places of the City, our three Castles call'd St. Elmo, Ovo, and Novo, were block'd up. The Populace to shew their sincere and unalterable unalterable Affection to the House of Austria, and how uneasy they had been under the French Yoke, ran as soon as the Imperialists had enter'd Naples, with great Fury to the Statue of the Duke of Anjou that stood in the Square call'd Giesu Novo, pull'd it down and broke it to pieces: And tho' they had arm'd themselves yet no Disorder happen'd: they would indeed have pillag'd the Houses of several French Inhabitants, but the Viceroy took immediate and effectual Care to prevent it; and Count Accersa, with a strong Party of Horse rode up and down the Streets and commanded in his Excellency's Name that every one should lay aside his Arms, and repair to his own Home; which they readily did without more ado. All the Spanish Cavalry, commanded by the Prince of Castiglione, who endeavour'd to get into the Country of Nocera, and elsewhere, was compell'd by the Prince of Avellino, a zealous Partisan of the House of Austria, who commanded a Body of 4 or 5000 Men, to retire between Cava and Salerno: Where General Caraffa with a strong Party of German Horse took the Prince of Castiglione himself, together with 500 Troopers, and among them 120 Officers Prisoners of War; and gave the Prince Leave on his Parole to come and submit himself to the Viceroy. Two Tartans laden with Bombs, some Cannon, and other Necessaries of War, together with a very rich Coach, &c, which for Want of Wind could not follow the Marquis of Villena, are brought hither; as are likewise 23 Iron Cannon that were found buried on the Sea-shore near Sonetto. On Sunday the 10th the Viceroy heard Mass in the Church of Carmine Maggiore; and in the Afternoon he and General Taun went to the Convent of San Gandioso to visit the Marchioness del Vasto, Wife of the Marquis of that Name, Ambassadour (as is said above) from his Majesty Charles III. at the Court of the Emperour. The 11th in the Morning the first Collateral Council was held in the above-nam'd Palace; and the Regents, the Marquis of Averno Decano, Don Gennaro d'Andrea, and the Duke of Laurito (who as before supplied the Office of Secretary) attended the Viceroy, who commanded them to order all the Governours of the Towns and Places of the Kingdom to acknowledge and obey our Sovereign King Charles III. This Order was yesterday in the Evening obey'd by one half of the Magistrates of the City of Nola, who sent the Keys of their City hither. All this has caus'd so general a Joy as never was known before, and no Man remembers to have ever seen such Illuminations, Bonfires, and other Rejoycings, which chang'd the Night to Day, so that Tradesmen could see to work in their Shops as by Day-light. All the Clergy have given the utmost Testimony of their Joy, and adorn'd the Pictures of his Majesty with an incredible Number of Wax-candles.
